Hiring Manager
BlueHeron Defense Solutions
Orlando, FL

Dear Hiring Manager:

I am applying for the Associate JavaScript Frontend Developer position with BlueHeron Defense Solutions. I have three years of experience building React and TypeScript applications for operational and training-support environments, along with a B.S. in Information Technology specializing in Web Design and Development. I am a U.S. citizen with an active Secret clearance, so I can meet the position's clearance requirement.

In my current role, I develop reusable React components for browser-based training workflows used across three application areas. I built Redux state flows and responsive navigation that preserve session context across desktop and tablet views, then integrated those interfaces with FastAPI and SQLAlchemy services backed by PostgreSQL. I also improved perceived load performance through lazy loading, optimized rendering, and asset-management reviews, validating changes with browser profiling and workflow tests.

My work also includes the practical parts of delivering and supporting web applications: Docker Compose environments, GitLab CI/CD checks, Linux and Bash diagnostics, Nginx-hosted deployments, API validation, and automated tests with Jest and pytest. Previously, I built Flask endpoints, SQL queries, and responsive React screens for a secure portal while working through GitLab pull requests and Jira-based Agile planning. I would bring that combination of frontend judgment, backend understanding, and clear communication to your web applications team.

I would welcome the opportunity to discuss how my experience could support BlueHeron Defense Solutions' federal training-systems customer in Orlando. I understand the position is contingent on contract award and funding, and I am comfortable with that condition.

Thank you for your consideration. I look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

Leonardo Mullins
