SUMMARY

Political Science student preparing for recruitment work through academic projects, campus outreach, and supervised event planning. Coursework in Political Science and Legal Studies supports clear explanations of academic programs, student opportunities, and public facing information. Academic projects include creating tabling activities, reviewing source material, analyzing survey responses, preparing presentations, and organizing event deliverables around class schedules. Experience with Microsoft 365, spreadsheets, presentation software, written briefs, and structured research supports accurate preparation and confident conversations. Campus involvement has strengthened respectful teamwork, inclusive interaction, accountability, public speaking, and professional follow up. Work with faculty guidance has built sound judgment, attention to detail, and practical self reflection. These strengths support welcoming prospective student conversations, organized preview events, and thoughtful program representation.

EXPERIENCE

Political Science Recruitment Outreach Project
University Project

August 2026 - Present
Bloomington, Indiana

Faculty guided academic project focused on prospective student outreach, program communication, tabling activities, event preparation, and organized presentation of Political Science opportunities. Work combines independent planning with peer feedback, source review, digital production, and scheduled deliverables completed alongside a full academic course load.

- Designed a simulated outreach plan organizing program highlights, opportunities, and common questions for event conversations.
- Built interactive tabling activities and tested instructions with 18 classmates for clear, welcoming participation.
- Analyzed 24 classroom survey responses and summarized recurring questions for improved recruitment talking points.
- Created presentation slides and handouts using Microsoft 365, applying formatting checks before faculty review.
- Delivered a five minute program overview and answered questions using departmental and course materials.
- Maintained preparation checklists covering materials, speaking practice, and setup deadlines alongside academic commitments.

Legal Studies Communication Research Assignment
Academic Research

January 2026 - May 2026
Bloomington, Indiana

Faculty supervised research assignment examining how public institutions communicate program and policy information. Project included source review, spreadsheet organization, critical evaluation, written and oral presentation, peer collaboration, inclusive language review, and documented revisions completed on schedule.

- Examined public communication practices and developed a focused research question under faculty supervision.
- Reviewed 32 academic and public source documents, coding recurring themes in a comparison spreadsheet.

- Converted research findings into a written brief and oral presentation for nonspecialist classmates.
- Distinguished factual claims, interpretation, and source limitations before incorporating evidence into deliverables.
- Coordinated peer review with three classmates and resolved conflicting suggestions through respectful discussion.
- Presented final work on schedule and documented citations, notes, and revision decisions for efficient review.
